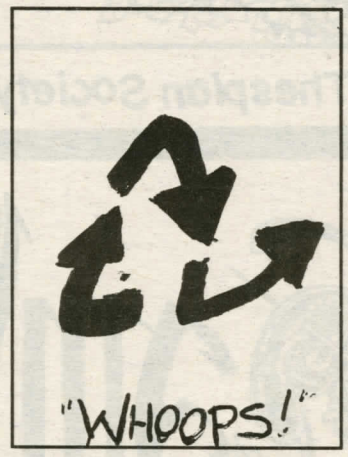
Recycling at Con U littered with problems

by Robert Meynell



Concordia's Recycling Committee is fed up. No company is willing to recycle Concordia's glass, so bottles are ending up in the garbage. Aluminum cans are being stolen before they can be picked up, recycling bins have gone missing, and the administration is not giving much support.

Jennifer Turkenburg, the Q-PIRG representative at the Recycling Committee, is unhappy with the performance of Concordia's recycling program.

"Other institutions have been able to do it and even make a profit," Turkenburg said. "We're going into the next century and you guys (Concordia University) can't even solve this problem."

The three-year-old Recycling Committee is made up of ten volunteers from Concordia's faculty and staff, and two coordinators who are paid through the work-study programme.

The situation is not hopeless, however. Recycling of paper was successfully implemented, with an efficiency rate of 78%. This saved Concordia $5,625 on the compactor collection fees.

But the program to recycle glass bottles and aluminum cans has had a rocky start.

Glass bottles have been a problem because of the lack of demand by recycling companies. And with much of the glass contaminated with bottle lids, straws and napkins, shipments are often rejected.

Meanwhile, aluminum cans are easily recycled, with a five cent return on each one. But recycling coordinator Alain Carrière says many of the cans disappear between the bins and the shipping docks, taken by individuals who want quick cash.

But the despite the obstacles it observes, the committee does not have the power to implement ideas to improve recycling. They play an advisory role to the Vice-Rector of Services, Charles Bertrand. Carrière said Bertrand was repeatedly invited to attend committee meetings, but never showed up.

Recently Shirley Maynes, from Bertrand's office, became an ex officio member of the Recycling Committee. Duff Anderson, a member of the committee, considers her participation to be a good sign that things will get done.

"They are more serious than they have been," he says.

This week the Recycling Committee is meeting with the city's recycling company, Rebut Solid, to discuss opening a possible contract with them. Their operation sorts the glass, metal and paper. The committee hopes that, in return for taking the profitable paper and aluminum objects, they will recycle the unprofitable glass.

The results of these negotiations will be presented to Bertrand who will make the final decision.

Caravaning for Cuba: Hundreds protest U.S. Embargo

by Brigitte McCann

Every year, hundreds of tourists head South to Havana to bask in the sun. But in March, six Quebeckers went to Cuba to protest the U.S. embargo which is running the country dry.

Carrying books, clothes and medicine in their luggage, they were the first Quebeckers to participate in the third world-wide Friendshipment Caravan to Cuba.

Joined by 250 Americans, Europeans and Mexicans who drove across 140 cities in North America, the caravan brought 150 tons of medication, school material, computers, radios, and other equipment, across the American border into Mexico from where it was shipped to Cuba by boat.

But driver Monica Johns, who took five weeks off from work to make the trip says it is still a very small gesture compared to the needs of Cuba's population of 11 million.

"Some Cuban hospital doctors told us that among the 452 medicines that they lack, 100 are considered essential," she said. "Cubans lack the very basics to function. We visited an old folks home that had only one wheelchair for the whole building."

Caravan drivers were in Montreal on Saturday to talk about the trip, at a panel discussion. Drivers and members of the caravan's organizing committee explained that the enforcement of the embargo, coupled with the collapse of Cuba's trade with the former Soviet block prevent the country from satisfying its domestic economic needs.

The U.S. embargo against Cuba was put in place following the Cuban revolution in 1959, which brought communist Fidel Castro to power. The private sector was nationalized, and important U.S. companies such as "Hershey's" were forced to leave. In 1992, the U.S. tightened the embargo by barring foreign subsidiaries of American companies from trading with the island.

American driver Paul Angel, an elementary teacher from the state of Vermont, felt ashamed of his country's stance toward Cuba.

"What the government does represents me, whether or not I chose to support it. It puts me in a position of having to act against my own government to actively support Cuba."

Throughout the trip, the drivers gave press conferences, potluck suppers and information sessions along 14 different routes that converged in Laredo, Texas, for the crossing of the American border.

Angel said the caravan encountered only a few road blocks during the trip.

"In New Jersey, there was a group of anti-Castro Cubans who tried to disrupt one of the caravan's meeting. But it was not a major incident," he said.

The caravan spent three days at Laredo preparing for the border crossing. The training before the crossing showed drivers what to do if physically confronted by border officials. Drivers of last year's caravan went on a 23-day hunger strike when border guards refused their passage.

This year, they crossed at six in the morning to avoid the problem.

"We thought we had better chances of easily going through if we tried early, when the agents would still be sleepy," explained Spanish-speaking Alexandro, one of the drivers.

The material got through without any problem except for the last pick-up truck.

"Two hours later, around eight, a group of police arrived and stopped our last convoy. They said members of the caravan had laughed at them," he said.

The four Canadian caravan committees in Vancouver, Toronto, Winnipeg and Montreal were created last December following a national meeting of the Canadian syndicates where the situation of Cuban workers was examined.

The members' task was to gather the fifteen thousand dollars necessary to send five drivers to Cuba with loaded cars.

"It cost an average of $2000 to send a driver," said Carlos Cornejo, representative of the general society of students of the CEGEP de Maisonneuve. He says students' associations from various CEGEPs and universities in Montreal provided money, humanitarian aid and free photocopies necessary to publicize the caravan.

The caravan should go again next year if Cornejo's enthusiasm is telling.

"If it takes 30 other caravans to abolish the embargo, I'm prepared to go," he said.

Briefly...

And the winner is...

The new CSU president is Marika Giles winning by almost twice as many votes as her closest competitor, Michelle Soso.

Giles' campaign came under scrutiny when opponent Len Podgurney dropped out of the race and spent the remainder of his campaign money in support of Giles. Giles overshot her $100 budget by $23 when Podgurney's posters were included in the account. She was not disqualified after candidates agreed it would be more detrimental to CSU's image to create a public controversy by taking the case to the Judicial Board.

Bye, bye athletics complex

The administration's referendum last week for the proposed $30 million athletics facility attracted only 6300 voters, missing its quorum requirement of 7500 students.

Phd students need not vote

Some PhD students were peeved when their names didn't show up on the voting lists for the sports complex referendum and CSU elections.

Students who weren't on the list, even if they had ID cards, were asked to get a copy of their transcript from the registrar's office to prove that they were students.

"We've been deprived of our right to vote," said Subbu Subramanian, a Computer Science PhD student. "Having to go all the way to the registrar's office was a real deterrent."

Still no audit on graduate coffee bar

The Graduate Student's Association closed down its coffee bar last summer, but the financial books have still not been reconciled.

Auditor Anamitra Shome said he could not do an audit because several documents were missing. The bar so far shows a $6,000 loss.

GSA president Jean-François Plamondon said the missing records were last in the hands of services manager Mohammed Quereschi, who said he gave them all to former president Cecile Sly.

Sly resigned last year, asking the GSA to sign a legal document confirming that she had turned over all pertinent documents in her possession, and absolving her from possible prosecution.

"But we found out afterwards that we are not allowed to deliver such a letter, because the Quebec government says nobody is immune to prosecution," said Plamondon.

City's affirmative action plan comes up short, says councilor

by Stephanie Pajevic

The City is not hiring enough minorities, says Sam Boskey, head of the Democratic Coalition of Montreal, the official opposition to Jean Doré's Montreal Citizens Movement (MCM).

The city has just released the 1993 progress report on the affirmative action plan for the hiring of ethnic minorities. The report announced that the City's temporary hiring had gone up from 23.99 per cent in 1992 to 24.63 per cent in 1993.

But Boskey says the city has nothing to be proud since it has not gotten rid of systemic racism. He opposes the fact that the City has cut back on ethnic hiring by almost 50 percent. Because of the city's cuts to hiring, the total number of ethnic minorities hired fell from 499 in 1992 to 281 in 1993.

"The bottom line is if you can't hire anybody at all, you can't hire ethnics," he said.

Marc Schneider, a spokesperson for the city, said Boskey is taking these figures out of context since hiring has been cut due to poor economic times. All hiring was frozen completely for seven months last year.

"Obviously when you cut global hiring in half, you're going to cut minority hiring," said Schneider.

The city's 25 per cent quota for minority hiring includes anybody whose ethnic origins are not British or French. There is no specific quota for visible minorities.

Boskey feels the city is doing a disservice to visible minorities. In 1993, they hired 12 full-time employees, two from ethnic minority groups and one from a visible minority. Boskey says that at the rate the city is hiring, "it's going to take centuries until they get to the number they're supposed to be hiring."

Boskey argues that temporary hiring does not improve the long-term prospects of minorities, since those who have been hired have either been laid off or have no job security. He says the situation will remain the same unless the City hires more minorities full-time.

Schneider says the present economic situation prevents the city from hiring any full-time employees.

But Boskey says there are other ways to encourage minority hiring in private companies that the City is not considering. He says companies should have affirmative action plans in place in order to obtain city contracts.

"It should not be too difficult to give preference to companies with affirmative action plans," he said. "The Federal government does this."

Boskey was once part Doré's MCM five years ago, but left because he felt the city was doing very little with regard to social issues.

"The City has given other policies higher priority," he said.

Gazette typesetters predict success

by Danny Chan

Locked-out Gazette typesetters will meet with the newspaper next month for a last attempt at reaching a contract agreement. Despite having been locked-out for almost a year, officials from the typesetters union are optimistic about next month's court hearings.

"We're going to win," said Peter Wilding, vice-chairman of the Gazette Typesetters' Union.

The 62 members of the union (local 145 of the Communication, Energy, and Paper Union) were locked out of their jobs last May, after refusing to accept changes to their contract.

The newspaper wants to completely phase out the hot metal typesetting process, in favour of cheaper, more efficient computerized layout.

"They had given us a lifetime guarantee against technology," said Larry Kent, chairman of the Gazette Typesetters' Union.

Wilding said the Gazette was in violation of its long-term agreement with the typesetters. The union's last contract was signed in 1981 and it guaranteed jobs to the over 200 Gazette typesetters employed at the time. Over 140 typesetters have retired since '81 and the company's intention was to eventually phase-out the union by not hiring replacements.

Although the Gazette offered to transfer employees into other jobs within the paper, the union refused the proposal. With the average age of typesetters at 55, some having worked for the Gazette for over 20 years, Wilding said workers fear being transferred into a job where they are not protected by a union and have little security.

"They want to take away our job security which we got in good faith," said Wilding. "They're demanding that we do the same work in a non-union environment...they want to renege on a deal that had job security for the union."

Anti-scab laws violated

Although a judge ruled the Gazette's lockout was legal, Wilding said 1153 charges have been laid against the paper for violating Quebec's anti-scab laws.

In June of 1993 , a government labour inspector accompanied Kent and another locked-out typesetter into the Gazette offices. In the first visit they found the fourth-floor composing room empty. But on the second visit, they found three replacement workers in the composing room.

"The company said there's no work for us and they go out and hire people who do our jobs," said Wilding. "The Gazette is a scab newspaper produced by scabs."

Until next month's hearings, the union will continue its pressure tactics against the company. The Quebec Federation of Labour released funds to the union last November to finance a boycott of the Gazette. The typesetters are urging people to cancel their subscriptions, boycott companies that advertise in the Gazette, and are also asking union members not to speak to the paper.

In the meantime, union members will continue to live on the strike pay they receive from the union—significantly less money than they used to receive from the Gazette.

"We are getting by on our lockout. One person sold his house. A lot of people sold their cars," said Wilding.

Added Kent, "It's been tough but people have to know they have to hang in there."

The Gazette was unavailable for comment.

by Reid Cooper

Part-time professors at the Centre for Continuing Education might have to sacrifice their departmental autonomy in order to get their first collective agreement.

The Centre for Continuing Education is financially independent from Concordia University, offering certificate courses instead of credit ones, with a predominantly part-time faculty. The collective agreement the professors are seeking might standardize the Centre's five faculties, which do not share the same policies, and do not require the same responsibilities of their professors.

The Centre's Language Institute has by far the most unique system, with faculty exercising much of the administrative control. Professors at the Institute sit on committees that evaluate and train professors, and determine seniority.

But the institute's innovative approach, developed over the the past 10 years, might be wiped out at the bargaining table. The collective agreement, which specifies job responsibilities, must apply uniformly to all part-time professors at the Centre.

Linda Trajillo, president of the Centre's faculty union, said taking away the progressive approach at the Language Institute would be a big mistake.

"It is in everybody's best interest to have positive elements in the design (of the Institute), and the professional development of the staff," said Trajillo.

But the university's chief negotiator doesn't think the Language Institute's special practices will benefit the Centre as a whole.

"The Language Institute is the largest (department), and they are the driving force behind the union", says Susan O'Reilly, acting director of Labour Relations. "The committees are not necessary. The Centre must pay its own way and can not afford such luxuries."

Language Institute professors do not want the union to give in.

"The evaluation committees are really crucial," said English professor Anna Thibeault. "They have guaranteed the excellence of the program."

~ 1608 LINCOLN CORNER GUY ONE BLOCK WEST OF YOU! ~

The Mobile Myth: then and now

Reprinted for legibility from Civil Liberties Issue

by Ingrid Hein

"I remember getting into this one car when me and a friend were busted and hitchhiking to Lachute. The guy was a freakin' loony!

"My friend had to hold on to the steering wheel while loony was pouring his coffee going 160 miles an hour.

"After two hours of insane pedal-to-the-metal driving, he drops us off on the side of the road in the middle of nowhere insisting that it was a good spot to get picked up," said Ted as he paused to take a sip of his lukewarm coffee. His eyes lit up as he shook his head.

"Not a car in sight!," he said, "So we figger out that we're way past St-Donat and so we start walking,

"We walked for two days. I was so dehydrated when I got home, I could hardly tell my girlfriend what happened."

Almost anyone who has hitchhiked before has a tall tale to tell. Some funny, some sad, some scary, and others downright horrific.

In 1978, when Ted was hitchhiking, the rules of the road, humanity and trust were quite different than they are today.

It was common to see three or four people, thumbs out on the side of the highway with a destination sign in their other hand, duffel bag in the grass. There were signs issued by the Ministry of Transport that read "Please pick up hitchhikers." Now the signs read "Hitchhikers will be prosecuted," and the official reasons have nothing to do with getting stranded in St. Donat or getting killed by a highwayman.

"It's because we don't want people stopping traffic," said Officer Pierre Fortin.

"The fine is twenty-five dollars, that is, if you're standing on the road. If you're standing on the sidewalk there is no fine.

"Municipal by-law 13-1 article 448 states that it is illegal for a pedestrian to be on the street for the purpose of soliciting transportation."

Officer Pierre Fortin added that he couldn't remember the last time an officer bothered to to issue a ticket for this offense.

"They don't arrest you for hitchhiking," said retired hitchhiker Pearson. "They arrest you for vagrancy, especially in the old days when everyone on the road was there because they had no money and no ambition to stay put in their town. Now people hitch for different reasons, most of them have a destination, a goal.

"We used to believe that the grass was greener on the other side of the fence, that's why we split town."

Pearson expressed his anger towards the cops (in those days), "They didn't really care that you were hitchhiking, it was just that if you looked like a hippie, they wanted to get you for something, and we all looked like hippies to them on the road."

Professor James Hayes, a retired hitchhiker, agreed, "I remember I was hitchhiking in the States in the 60's, and I got into the car with a crazy group of Puerto Rican guys who didn't speak any English. I was a little alarmed. They started speeding, and the cops caught up with them. They searched the car and found knives hidden under the seat, and they asked me where my draft card was. Of course I'm from Canada, I said. And so they took me in for illegal immigration. I got a court date, tricked into pleading guilty with a fine to pay with the last of my money, and as soon as I stepped out of the courthouse, they arrested me for vagrancy, three weeks in jail."

Today hitchhikers see the risks differently. They are not afraid of cops.

"They don't bother you at all," said Steve Higgins, who hitchhiked across Canada twice last year, "but you've gotta watch who you're getting into the car with; it's safer in the daytime than at night.

"The way I look at it, hitchhiking is only as risky as picking up a hitchhiker."

So the tables have turned. In the past, hitchhikers were scared of police, not people. Now, hitchhikers, are scared of people.

"You've got to be on your guard," Steve Higgins said, who hitchhikes frequently between Montreal and Toronto, "But then again, you have to lure people into picking you up. I find that carrying my guitar helps. But the best story I've heard is the guy who carries his stuff in a portable gas tank, you know, one of those red ones. He always gets picked up really quick. You've got to look harmless, and hopefully your ride will be safe."

Comparing Foufounes

P.S. to the B.S.!!!!

In response to Rob Ferraz' letter regarding my Greenday review, your insight and vast knowledge of the hardcore scene was greatly appreciated. I would like to point out the fact that my comparison between the members of Tilt and a My Rules photozine was exactly that, a comparison. It was not a fact that I felt was carved in stone. Secondly, 1039 is how the Greenday album was listed on the flyer being distributed by Lookout Records, nowhere did I see it written as 39/Smooth, no problem there, thanx for the info. As for the falseness of my line "there was absolutely no restrictions on stage-diving that night", I would like to point out one thing. If you have frequented Foufounes to any extent during alternative shows, which I guess you have not, judging by the venom you spewed towards this venue, then you would be able to find truth in my statement. Anyone familiar with Foufounes policies on audience stage presence would most likely share my view. Most of the time you can't even get your elbow on the stage without being flattened by "security". Maybe you haven't experienced this, sitting in your perfect seat up in the balcony, but it's the truth. Oh! By the way , nice letter in the Mirror.

Pap tests are not STD (sexually transmitted disease) tests

This is to respond to a statment made in your recent article "Young women not immune to cervical cancer" (April 5, 1994). The article states, "A Pap test, an internel examination which samples cervical cells, is essential to the early detection of STD's, cervical cancer and a host of its precursors."

In fact, a Pap test does not detect most STD's (sexually transmitted diseases) such as chlamydia, gonorrhea, HIV, and hepatitis B. It does detect abnormal cervical cells and cancers, and can suggest the presence of the Human Papilloma Virus which causes genital warts, a sexually transmitted infection linked to cervical cancer.

Many women assume that an annual Pap test "includes everything", but in fact most STD's must be diagnosed by means of separate swabs or blood tests, specific for each infection. At Health Services we offer women the choice of having STD tests in addition to the Pap test, but this is not always the case when students visit their own physicians in the community, who may only do a Pap test unless the woman requests STD testing. Some physicians do not have access to all STD testing procedures, or may not always ask their sexually active clients the appropriate questions in order to determine a need for testing. It is therefore important that women and men be aware of the limitations of certain tests performed by their physicians.

Our suggestion is that students make a point to inform themselves about the STD's for which they may be at risk, and to ask their physician to specify what tests are being done.

Equal Opportunity at Reggie's

In light of recent allegations regarding the hiring process at Reggie's, I thought it would be interesting to your readers if I outlined how I came upon my position as a server at the very same bar.

It is quite simple really. I applied and four (long) months later I was granted an interview. From there, based on the fact that I have 7 years of experience in the service industry and that I am a third year student here at Concordia. I was hired - I have NO connections.

Furthermore, I resent the implication that I received my position through favoritism. Especially as I had not the slightest inkling who Phil or Paul were until I was introduced at my interview.

JU-KNOW THAT BAND, RED LIGHT?

by Mabel Lee

Professional musician, song writer, composer, producer, artist, DJ at some of Montreal's trendiest night clubs, co-owner of a record company, and most recent winner of a Juno award. These are hardly the average credentials of a 25 year old.

For someone who doesn't think that he's anything special, Miguel Graca has accomplished a lot. He's come a long way from being a choir boy in Portugal. His band Red Light won the 1994 Juno for Best Dance Recording with the club-mix version of their single, Thankful.

"Going to the Junos was unforgettable," Graca says "We were excited just to be there. Our category was the first one of the night, and when they called the winner, "Red Light", we just sat there thinking 'I guess we should get up now.' We were completely unprepared because we didn't expect to win.

"After our acceptance, they led us backstage where they took the Juno out of our hands and told us we'll be recieving ours in the mail,". Graca recalls the shock of the sudden seizure of their Juno."With all the hard work we've put in, I just wanted to hold that glass pyramid five seconds longer."

"Music has been a very important part of my life. I was brought up with it. My early influences was the music that my parents listened to; Jazz, cabaret, classical, samba. My family, parents, and my best friend have been the greatest influences and source of encouragement and support."

Things really got started when his band, Ballyhoo, performed his song There For You. It was released on FRONT Records in 1991.

Like most other young bands, Ballyhoo dissipated. Fortunately, the dissatifaction Graca felt when working with them strenghtened his resolve to become a sucessful musician.

"Having worked with all these bands, what made me continue was that I felt like they could all improve. And I was never able to because there were other people involved, so I started doing my own stuff."

Owning and operating a record company is as easy as making rhisois (a very complicated Portuguese appetizer), but apparently worth the effort. Graca's words of advice for young struggling artists:

"Just believe in yourself. I mean, that's all you can do. It''s a lot of hard work and many long, long hours. If you believe you can do something, then you can. And obstacles? There are no obstacles. They are there when you listen to people, but I just listen to my gut instincts."

Graca's gut feelings lead him to form his own record company, FRONT, and start several projects that are slowly gaining acknowledgement, including Red Light. The KM Formula reached top ten in the U.K., and made it to BILLBOARD magazines' charts.

Demand for There For You, forced Graca to press an additional 4000 copies which proved insufficient for this overnight boom in demand. 2000 bootlegged copies appeared in New York City, which lead Hi-Bias Records to have the band sing Thankful in 1993.

Graca says most of Red Light's sales are in Japan, Norway, and England. It seems winning a Juno does not give you automatic exposure in Canada.

"We just don't get the support we should be getting. We're from Montreal, and Musiqué Plus played the Thankful video once. It's very dissapointing. I spent two intense months busting to get them to play it more. MuchMusic plays it at least once a week. Maybe the local dance scene will progress enough so the local talent will get what they deserve. Maybe putting out your own records through your own company is what it takes to get noticed. It certainly helps."

Graca and FRONT partner Robert Ouimet are now working on Red Light's first album, set for an autumn release. He is also working on remixes for other groups like Toronto-based Oval Emotion. The remaining studio time is devoted to new material from local groups.

"I'm very fortunate to be able to do what I enjoy. I'm just the same 'Joe-Blow' as always. I'm not reaping in nearly enough rewards of my success, but what keeps me going is knowing that I don't have to listen to other people and work the regular nine-to-five job....you've got to sacrifice a lot to be able to see what's most important to you.

THE OYSTER BAND: A GOOD SOURCE OF ENERGY...

by Sean Moore

This is one show that should not have been missed. For those of you who were not in attendance, you're gonna kick yourself in the near future when these guys become better known. Everything about the show was perfect, from the pre-concert show, to the encore. The sound, as usual at Café Campus, was impeccable.The atmosphere was jubilant, the crowd was receptive and the music was solid.

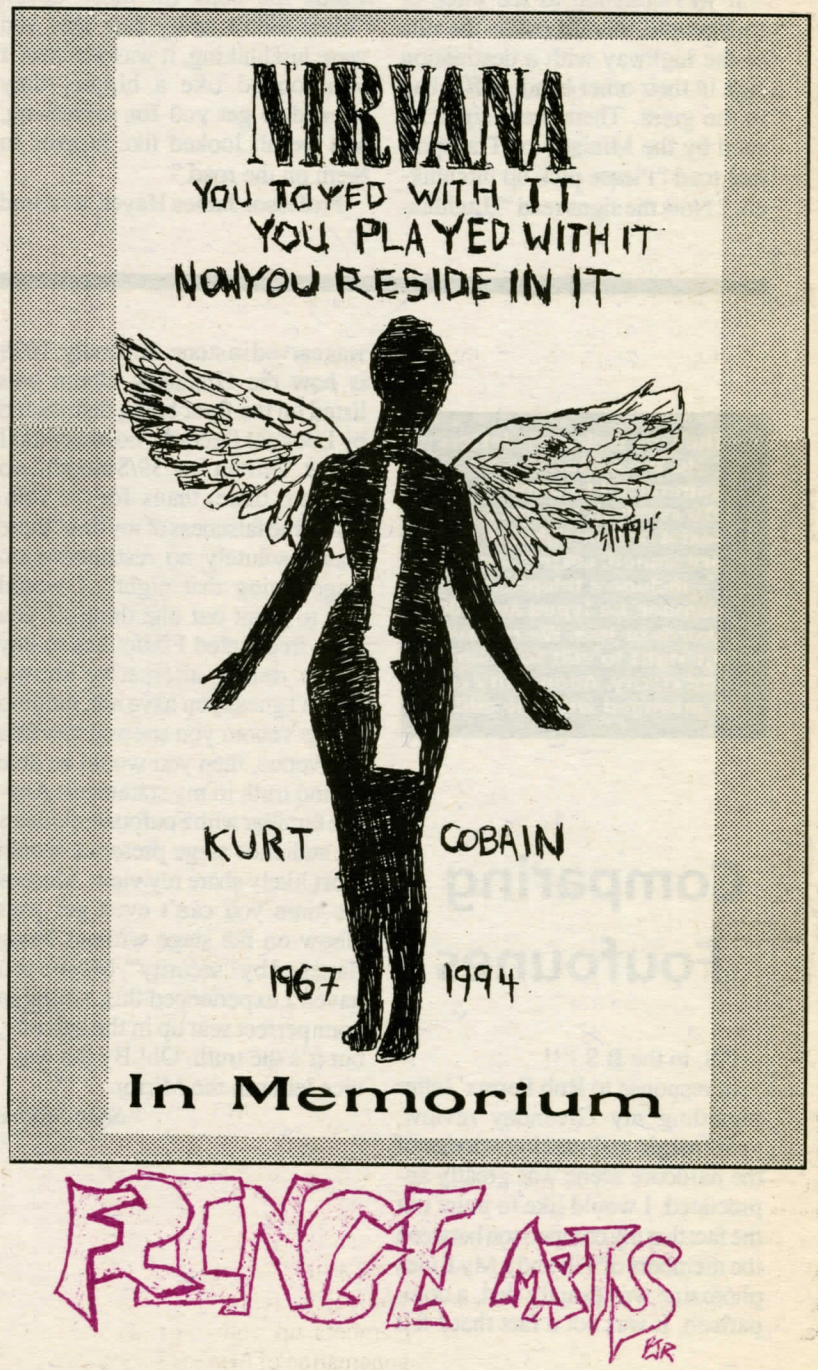
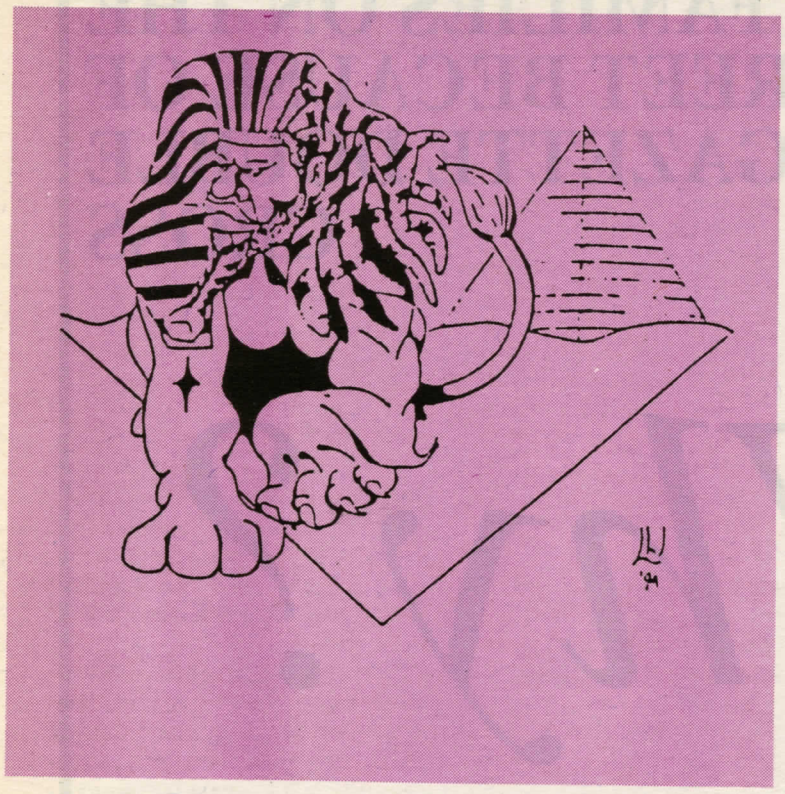
The Oyster Band combine a strong Celtic sound, through the use of accordian, violin and cello, with a solid roots-rock punch comparable to that of The Clash. Songs played, ranged from moody, somber violin/cello duets to remakes of I Fought the Law and the New Order tune, Love Vigillantes. Both had been reworked with Celtic fervor. Good stuff. The bassist was incredibly adept at switching back and forth between bass and cello which lent a special something to that Oyster sound.

Celtic, yes. Pogues-like, no. From their first number, a comparison was festering inside my skull. This band from the U.K. have a very audio-likeness to an Australian band known as Weddings, Parties, Anything, another squeeze-box orientated group. This style of music, this hybridization of Celtic folk and contemporary rock and roll seems to be reaching an increasingly larger audience. As true as this is, in most places, it was not very apparent at Cafe Campus on Saturday night (4/10/94). The turnout was, how you say in English? PALTRY! It was a much more relaxed scene than the ones of experienced at the usual shows I've attended. It wasn't empty, but the venue was only filled, at best, to 50% of its maximum capacity, which is sad. A band this bitch'in, deserves maximum attendance, much like the previous dates on their Holy Bandits tour. According to one of the Dennon reps, (the company promoting The Oyster Band), Toronto and Ottawa were totally packed shows.

The amount of people in no way dissuaded the band, though. The members were all in their own worlds, rockin' and groovin' in time with those on the dance floor, at times joining them in merry line-dancing jig-fests. To start things off on the right foot, local talent, Liam Callahan and friends treated the audience to their own bran-o-Celtic tuneage. The only drawback with the entire show was the length. It was too short. It started around 9 p.m. and ended around 10:45p.m., in order to get the dance-kids on the dance floor to shake their pathetic asses to over-played, over-rated commercial drivel.

Fantastic show, nonetheless. Their album is called Holy Bandits and is available in stores now. I grow weary of this idle banter. Off with you, I must lance my boils. P.S.- How's that Div?





by Osei Alleyne

Kush is the name of ancient Ethiopia, the precursor civilization to ancient Egypt. Ancient Egypt is currently recognized as being the first well-developed civilization and possibly the longest-lasting one.

The Greco-Roman model of politics and society upon which modern western civilization is based draws immensely from ancient Egyptian science and religion, and so the new world today is greatly indebted to this old culture.

Despite the attempt of European historians to prove that early ancient Egypt was something other than a Black African culture, this notion is repeatedly refuted by historians of all races.

Reclamation of ancient Egypt by Black Africa and her diaspora as her own is, ultimately, mentally and spiritually empowering to say the least.

The two groups, The Children Of Kush, and 4Ideas Promotions are fledgling organizations, made up of undergraduate university students, most of whom belong to the Caribbean Students Union at Concordia. These organizations are dedicated to the promotion of cultural events in and around the city of Montreal.

Their concept here is to create a 90 to 120 minute-long jazz, poetry, and rap fusional show, scheduled for May 23, 1994, at Club Soda.

A live DJ will play instrumental tracks to which a live jazz band will improvise, while poets and rappers will avail themselves to provide the vocal and intellectual core of the show.

The show, entitled "THE CHILDREN OF KUSH ARE RISING", will be interspersed with intervals of accapellas, African dance, reggae sessions, and special poetic packages. The MC for the night will also play a narrative role, as the show will be presented in the form of a simple story.

In addition to this, local painters and artists will also display their works on site.

The purpose of the show is to present these three great Black urban art forms against a back drop of jazz, to resurrect the underground tribes of socially conscious artists and most importantly, to provide an original and refreshing night of great entertainment.

This show is, to our knowledge, the first of its kind in Montreal, with the ability to draw crowds of all ages, vocations and nationalities within Montreal's Black community and without.

This is being organized as a non-profit show with the proceeds being donated to the 'Lasalle Black Community Center After School' program, the Montego Bay 'Stay in School' program and another soonto be chosen.

Posters advertising Ticket sales will soon appear across town. The show starts at 8 pm until 10 pm, and the doors open at 7 pm. The price is $8 in advance, and $10 at the door.

Nailbomb
Point Blank
Attic Records

by Daria Gamliel

The Nailbomb guys are not happy. With song titles like Shit Piñata and Sick Life, it's obvious. Combining two of today's heaviest bands, Nailbomb have a lot to get off their chest. Max Cavalera of Brazil's Sepultura and Alex Newport of England's Fudge Tunnel recorded the album in Arizona.

Originally, the band's name was Hate Project, but they changed it to Nailbomb, which refers to a crude weapon used by the IRA.

Some of the tracks were done at Cavalera's home, in his son's nanny's bedroom. The nanny, being very religious, had posters of the Virgin Mary up on her walls. It wouldn't be surprising if Nanny had an urge to rinse the guys' dirty mouths out with soap. Could this be where the inspiration for the song Religious Cancer came from?

The band members feel Nailbomb allows them to express ideas which wouldn't fit into either Sepultura or Fudge Tunnel's styles. And express they do, with polite lyrics such as, "Fuck you and your plans/I live my life my way/You scumbag, you waste." (Vai Toma no Cu)

Cavalera and Newport take turns on vocals, while industrial samples and savage drumbeats lurk in the background. Standouts include Blind and Lost and World of Shit.

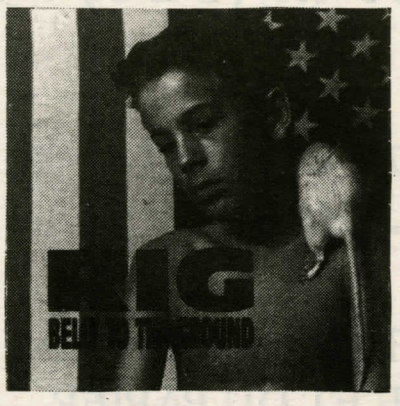
If you're fed up with your life, sick of yourself, and angry at the world, start by getting back at your parents for those proverbial formative years, and play this sucker REAL loud. It'll easily empty the room, if not force the whole neighborhood into exodus.

RIG
Belly to the Ground
Cruz Records

By Sean Moore

Yeah! Yeah! Yeah! There's eleven cuts on this one. Why eleven? Because we like eleven. So what else can be said? Certainly not very original sounding, but then again if you can show an original sounding band these days, I'd like to show a thinking mans police force.

Belly to the Ground!?!! Creepy sounding, machine-driven explorations of the human mindscape, served up with a generous side-order of mid-temperature samples. Pretty grim stuff, you probably won't hear this replacing the theme to Love Boat anytime soon.



"Whats it sound like though?" Well, if ya really gotta know, Rig clambers up your with the ratatat punctuation of Ministry (post-disco years) and the megaphone whisperings of a Butthole Surfin' contest sponsored by Monster Voodoo Machine. The album was produced by Gregg Ginn who also appears, guitar in hand, on the third track. Theres a whole lotta programming, no real drums, guitar-work of both kinds (bass/6-string), and megaphone-enhanced vocals. Now, very simply, does this appeal to you? If not, well then you may leave now. Thanx for coming out. See ya!!! If it does sound appealing and you have found the ring of Elrond, turn to page 395.....

David Bowie
OST: The Buddha of Suburbia
BMG

by Jeff Nearing

News flash, David Bowie is back!

After the lacklustre reception and uninspiring content of Black Tie, White Noise, Bowie has found something to sink his teeth into.

Buddha was originally designed to be instrumental orchestration for a BBC 2 teleplay, but soon grew to be a fully realized experiment in "chaos inspired" and non-narritive song writing.

The tracks on the disk include Sex and the Church, a flowing electronically altered chanting song reminiscent of Laurie Anderson, complete with a background hum that swells and pulsates. The title track came as a surprise to me as an old time listener of Bowie's work. It's full of snippits of the best parts of his career in the form of two or three bars of his old songs such as Space Oddity and Warsazwa.

The return to Bowie's roots can be attributed to the recent popularity of seventies alternative culture and Bowie's role within that movement. The whole soundtrack has Brian Eno's fingerprints all over it, even though the liner notes make no mention of him being involved in the project.

Bowie's liner notes take on the form of an essay that gives credit to his seventies influences and particularly to Eno. He also gives a call to arms to other British musicians not to be engulfed in the American "blanket of homogenous culture".

I can only hope that more U.K. artists will hear his call.

The Mahones
Draggin' The Days
Kinetic Records

by Jon Richler

Holy reminiscence, these guys take me back to my Island of birth, and remind me of roots that are not mine by genetic right, but by cultural absorption: Celtic mayhem! The Mahones are Irish all the way to the Blarney Stone, but their secret origin is Kingston. I know, sounds absurd. The only good stuff about That Place is that its' another location to go on a big, dirty load (that's Newf lingo for drunken stupor). That is, until now.

Witness their strength on the tin whistle, mandolin, accordian, drums, and the raunchy vocals that are obvious tribute to wagon-rider Shane McGowan. Point: they sound like The Pogues. Even their name is a tribute to them. Counter Point: what odds? Talent is in abundance in this 4-year-old band, and energized is not the word to fittingly describe their string strumming, drum pounding, squeeze-box jamming, whistle tooting, bombastic sound.

Drag out your bottle of rum, order in some fish and chips, and party on with the rapid-fire Mahones Medly, Whiskey In The Jar, and challenge your bottle-worshipping posse to a 140 BPM drinking competition for the album's length.

Draggin' The Days is an essential for all Celtic rock fans, and even holding it just might boost your drinking tolerance to unimagined power. Does it have to be told that it was released on St. Patrick's Day? Not 45 minutes after the contract was signed, the boys had spilled beer all over the record exec's office furniture. Let it said that the album is just as frivilous as the band, but not as clumsy. The Mahones are touring as we speak, and will stumble into town tomorrow to play at Purple Haze for only five clams. You may see me there, but rest assured, I'll be seein' Two a' you! Long may your big jib draw, Mahones.

Gay Games head for New York City

Smashing Dykes

by Don Buchanan

Decathlete Tom Waddell was honoured to take part in the 1968 Mexico City Olympic games. But once there he experienced homophobia, ageism, sexism, racism and nationalism. Angry, he founded the Gay Games, with the belief that "To do one's personal best is the ultimate goal of all human achievement," opening them to anyone regardless of age, race, sexual orientation or ability.

Waddell had a vision of the political potential of empowering the lesbian, gay , bisexual and transgender community, to work for equal rights. His vision was of the Games shattering stereotypes and showing what the queer community had to offer to the global community. Twelve years and three Games later, they're bigger than ever and scheduled to take place in New York this summer.

With over 13, 000 participants and half a million spectators, it will be the largest athletic and cultural event in the world. Events will range from sporting competitions in swimming, and track and field, to cultural activities in venues around the city.

"Because New York is the media capital of the world, we expect a lot more attention to be focused on Unity '94 compared with past Games", said Marlin Collingwood, Director of Public Information for Gay Games IV.

Stonewall remembered

The date and location of Unity '94 are also significant because they commemorate the 25th anniversary of the Stonewall riots, an event referred to as the birth of the queer rights movement.

Until this historic event, gay and lesbian bars were regularly raided by police, the patrons were held oyernight in jail without being charged, and their names were printed in the papers. The night of June 26th, 1969, the queer community felt empowered to fight back, emotionally charged by the memorial service for their icon, Judy Garland. Drag queens led the rally that forced police to retreat to their precinct station, where they were held under siege while angry queers burnt police cars and chanted outside.

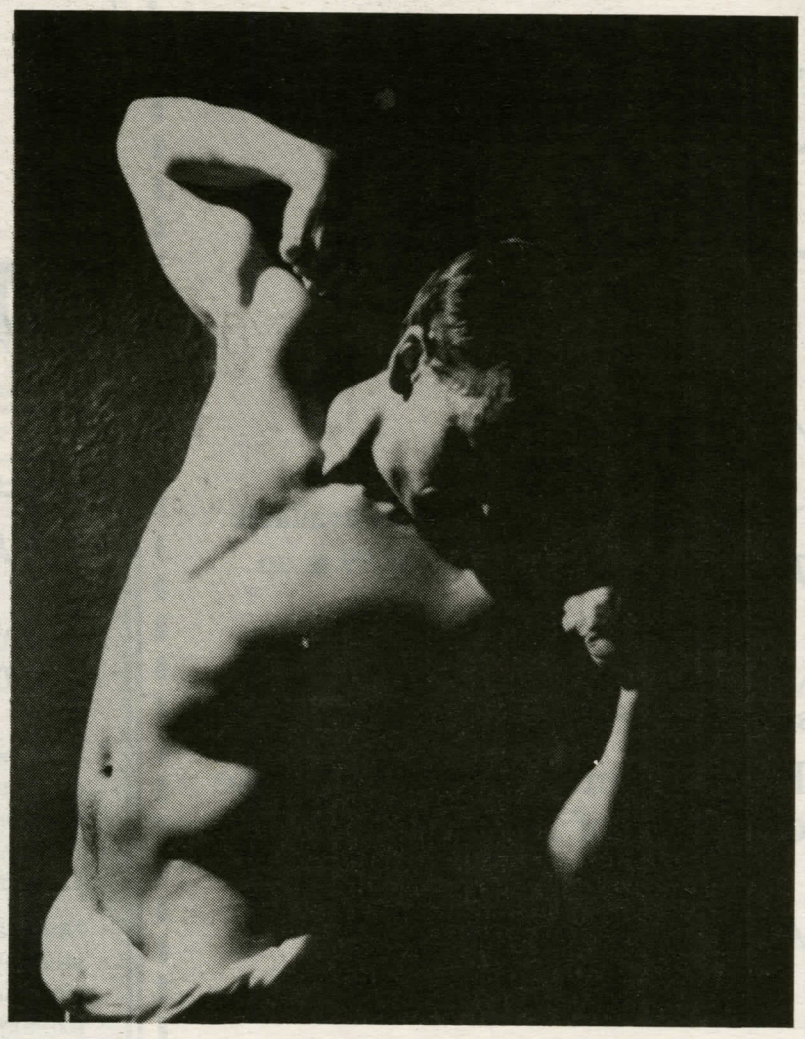
Montrealers off to Games

Montreal groups won't be missing out on the action.

Noreen, a psychology student at Concordia, and a member of Montreal's women's volleyball team, the Smashing Dykes, said that the team is focused on preparing for Unity '94. But things haven't been easy.

"Money is the biggest issue facing the team in preparation for UNITY '94. We need about $10,000 for the 9 days in New York, and so far we've only raised about $1,000. We've planned a Mega Party at the Centre Communautaire des Gais et Lesbiennes for Saturday, April 23, as a way of raising additional funds to send the team."

The Smashing Dykes have also done some fundraising in the straight community, under the pseudonym 'C'est La Vie'. David Delderfield, a member of Montreal Equipe Natation and an amateur photographer, has put together a calendar called "Les Hommes d'Equipe Montreal" as a fundraising item



The sport of finding funding

The financial challenges are not just limited to the local teams. Four years ago in Vancouver, the Games ended with a deficit because a cultural grant from lotteries money was denied by then-premier Bill Vander Zalm.

The organizing body of Unity '94 is similarly pressed for money, as well as time. Even with such major sponsors as Continental Airlines, Naya Water, and Miller Brewing Company, the organization had only raised a part of the projected expenses of $6 million.

"This is less than 1% of the budget for the last Summer Olympics for an event that will have a greater number of participants!"said Collingwood. The Games have received very little in government funding, in spite of the fact that New York City is expected to receive $100 million in economic benefits.

Until 1987, the name Gay Olympics was used, but the organizers were forced to change the name to Gay Games, because of a successful lawsuit brought against them by the International Olympic Committee. The IOC argued that they owned the rights to the word "Olympic", although other organizations such as the Special Olympics has been allowed to use the title.

Gay Games I, (Challenge '82), was held in San Francisco and attracted over 1,300 athletes from 179 cities. Gay Games II, (Triumph in '86), also held in San Francisco, was the largest international amateur sporting event held in North America with over 3400 athletes competing.

Hosting Gay Games III (Celebration 90), Vancouver incorporated a cultural festival, reflecting the diversity of the community. The result was beyond their wildest dreams. Over 8,500 participants joined 50,000 spectators to make the Games an important athletic, cultural, and spiritual events for the queer community. Many new sports were added to the roster, and two world records were set in swimming.

"It was crazy, the busiest and most action packed time in my whole life. After the Closing Ceremonies all I did was sleep," remembers John Whistler of Vancouver, an organizer of the cycling portion of the Games.

In aquatics, over 700 swimmers made it the largest swim meet ever held in Canada, with more participants than in the Montreal Olympics.

And next year...

The Federation of Gay Games oversees the Games, chooses the host cities, and sets the legal framework. The Federation has a volunteer Board of Directors, which includes sport and cultural leaders from cities around the world. It sets the principles for the Games, emphasizing participation over winning, in an environment of inclusion and acceptance.

This past November, the Federation met to choose who would host the next Gay Games. Queers from communities of Atlanta and Sydney made pitches, but Amsterdam won.

"They were chosen primarily because they offered a gateway to Europe," said Gilles Pettigrew, the co-chair of the Sports Committee. "Because the Games do not discriminate on the basis of sexuality, age, race, or ability, Amsterdam will open the phenomenon of the Gay Games to the entire European community."

Once again, the Games will foster a sense of pride in the queer community. Pride in itself, in its accomplishments, and in its potential.

how she looked when I never knew her.
It is on stiff cardboard that frays like an unhemmed pant-leg around the edges.

This photograph is in shades of grey and black and white, an ascetic to the shifting colours of that autumn day.

She is sitting on a rock reading a book of mysteries, above her a tree snakes out its leaves and reaches for the wind with bare arms. Below her the shale clickclacks out harmonies as she recrosses her legs. All about her the lake with waves whipped and creamed a frothy white rage in its stillness.

her hair is blown by the onshore breeze but is static here in black and white, so too her muffler must have flapped and covered the pages momentarily making her lose her place or page.

Her legs are crossed, her arms at her side, the pinnacle of elegance yet more dead that the bones around which the worms now spiral.

She would have hated the photgraph,

"Bloody dull old things I say. Rather, visit the tree where I read and sat. Meditate on the rippling waves that crash the hours by and search for my reflection that has long since settled in the silt.

Dredge my memory and hear me sing like a cardiganned siren, watch my reading form cry and dance, returned from beyond the river."

Movement: For Christopher Hancock

'...embrace the eternal presence.'

Movement
in a stone that breathes the heat of the day
in vanishings of form called 'mirage'
in the footprint
like these words moving across the page older then reborn under newfound eyes
the child tracing another's step finds an Orchid reclining into Sunset Movement like bloods of dawn from the dark flesh of night
like the flickering flame thought casting shadows on the page Movement in your sleeping body
my eyes devouring your flesh
optical intercourse with your image flickering (though still!)
through time
in my mind's eye
M o ve men t
in the cooling of mirage to stasis like this period.

My Job...

to empty the vase of its poetry to tip it and chip its moon-rim with crater and spill
the milk on rough hewn wooden table to write the grooves and the low-tide ebbings of the crawling liquid to the edge of the table and to pause breathless, retention of a water spider, quivering hestitant, curious,
and to fall - beaded whiteness, perfection, globular undulation through currents of air and drafts
- to pool in a pond of words still not still but moving like speech, like the ocean, like spring.

Student athletes trade sweaty t-shirts for awards

by Marie-Chantal Coté

After a long and difficult season, the work of Concordia's student athletes' was finally recognized, at the 18th Annual Athletic Awards Banquet.

To see all those athletes dressed so formally was a real change from their usual shorts and t-shirts, or their shoulder pads and skates. And it must have been a real change for them to be able to sit down and be on the receiving end of the game.

The two top awards went to Natascha Wesch, from the women's rugby team, and to Paul Chesser, from the Stingers football team.

Wesch, a scrum half, won the female athlete of the year award. She was selected as an All-star for a second time by leading her team to its second QURL title in a row.

Chesser, a defensive end, won the Dr. Robert J. Brodrick Trophy as the male athlete of the year. He was one of the main reasons the Stingers made their way to the Dunsmore Cup, in Toronto. Chesser's talent and efforts had previously been honoured as an O-QJFC All-Star and a First Team All-Canadian this season. Chesser also won the J.P. Metras Trophy as the outstanding lineman in the CIAU.

Basketball players Eva Samoré and Maxime Bouchard's talents as rookies were also twice-recognized. The pair had already won the QSSF rookie of the year award in their respective league, and have now been recognized as Concordia's rookies of the year.

Samoré was awarded the Laurie Brodrick Trophy, averaging 7.7 points per game, with 6 rebounds.

Bouchard, who was a CCAA All-Canadian in his last CEGEP year, has averaged 14.3 points per game which got him a position on the QSSF First All-star team.

Bouchard's teammate, Robert "the philosopher" Ferguson, a fifth-year senior guard, was the recipient of the Ron Lapointe Award, presented to him, as a graduating player having shown strong leadership throughout his career. In this, his last year, Ferguson has been named the MVP in the QSSF and has also been named to the league's first All-Start team. He averaged 11.7 points per game this season, with 5 rebounds. His talent and leadership has also won him a spot on the CIAU second All-Canadian team.

Elfrida Taylor, a second-year sprinter won the Denise Beaudet Award as a graduating athlete who displayed talent, leadership and commitment to excellence. Taylor finished fifth in the province with her performance at the 50-metre sprint.

Two members of the women hockey team, Ginnie Brûlé and Karyn Bye were named co-winners of the Fittest Athlete of the year Award. Brûlé finished the season with 6 goals and 8 assists, while Karyn Bye led her team's scoring with 44 goals and 41 assists. Bye is currently a member of the USA national women's hockey team, and she will be competing next week at Lake Placid. Brûlé also received a special merit Award for her strong contribution to the team's success.
